DjF du Marais

Robert Edward McGinnis

Robert Edward McGinnis est célèbre pour avoir peint plus de 1 200 couvertures de romans et 40 affiches de films.

Il est né en 1926 à Cincinnati dans l'Ohio, mais a grandi à Wyoming, petite ville de l'Ohio et qui n'a rien à voir avec l'état du Wyoming (une quinzaine de localités à travers les USA s'appellent Wyoming).

Son talent de dessinateur est encouragé très tôt par son père, "Dutch", qui lui a notamment appris à dessiner ses personnages de dessins animés favoris.

Malgré les grandes capacités de son fils en sport, Mildred, la mère Robert, l'oblige à aller plutôt suivre des cours de dessin, notamment dans des musées d'Art le samedi.

Une fois diplômé, Robert traverse les États-Unis en auto-stop jusqu'à Hollywood, et part étudier dans les studios Walt Disney où on lui enseigne l'art du dessin animé.

À la fin de la Seconde Guerre mondiale, il fait son service dans la Marine marchande.

The Last QuarryDe retour au pays, il revient à Cincinnati et entre à l'Ohio State University pour y recevoir un enseignement en arts plastiques.

Il prend également des cours du soir au Central Academy of Commercial Art. Au même moment, il joue au sein d'une célèbre équipe de football (américain) de l'Ohio.

Au milieu des années cinquante, lui et son épouse, Ferne (également artiste, avec laquelle il aura trois enfants), quittent l'Ohio pour New York.

Il trouve du travail dans l'illustration de publicités chez Fredman-Chaite Studios et, en 1958, il fait la connaissance de Mitchell Hooks, un célèbre illustrateur américain de revues et de romans (qui concevra pour le cinéma l'affiche de Dr. No, 1962).

Hooks lui ouvre les portes de Dell Publishing, où McGinnis va commencer à illustrer les pages de garde de nombreux polars, principalement la série des Mike Hammer de Mickey Spillane, les romans de Carter Brown ou la série des Micheal Shayne, célèbres Outre-Atlantique.

C'est la période où McGinnis sera le plus prolifique et se fera reconnaître pour son talent de dessinateur haut de gamme, avec ses impressionnants portraits détaillés inscrits dans un univers de femmes fatales, de pin-ups, de pistolets et de bourbon.

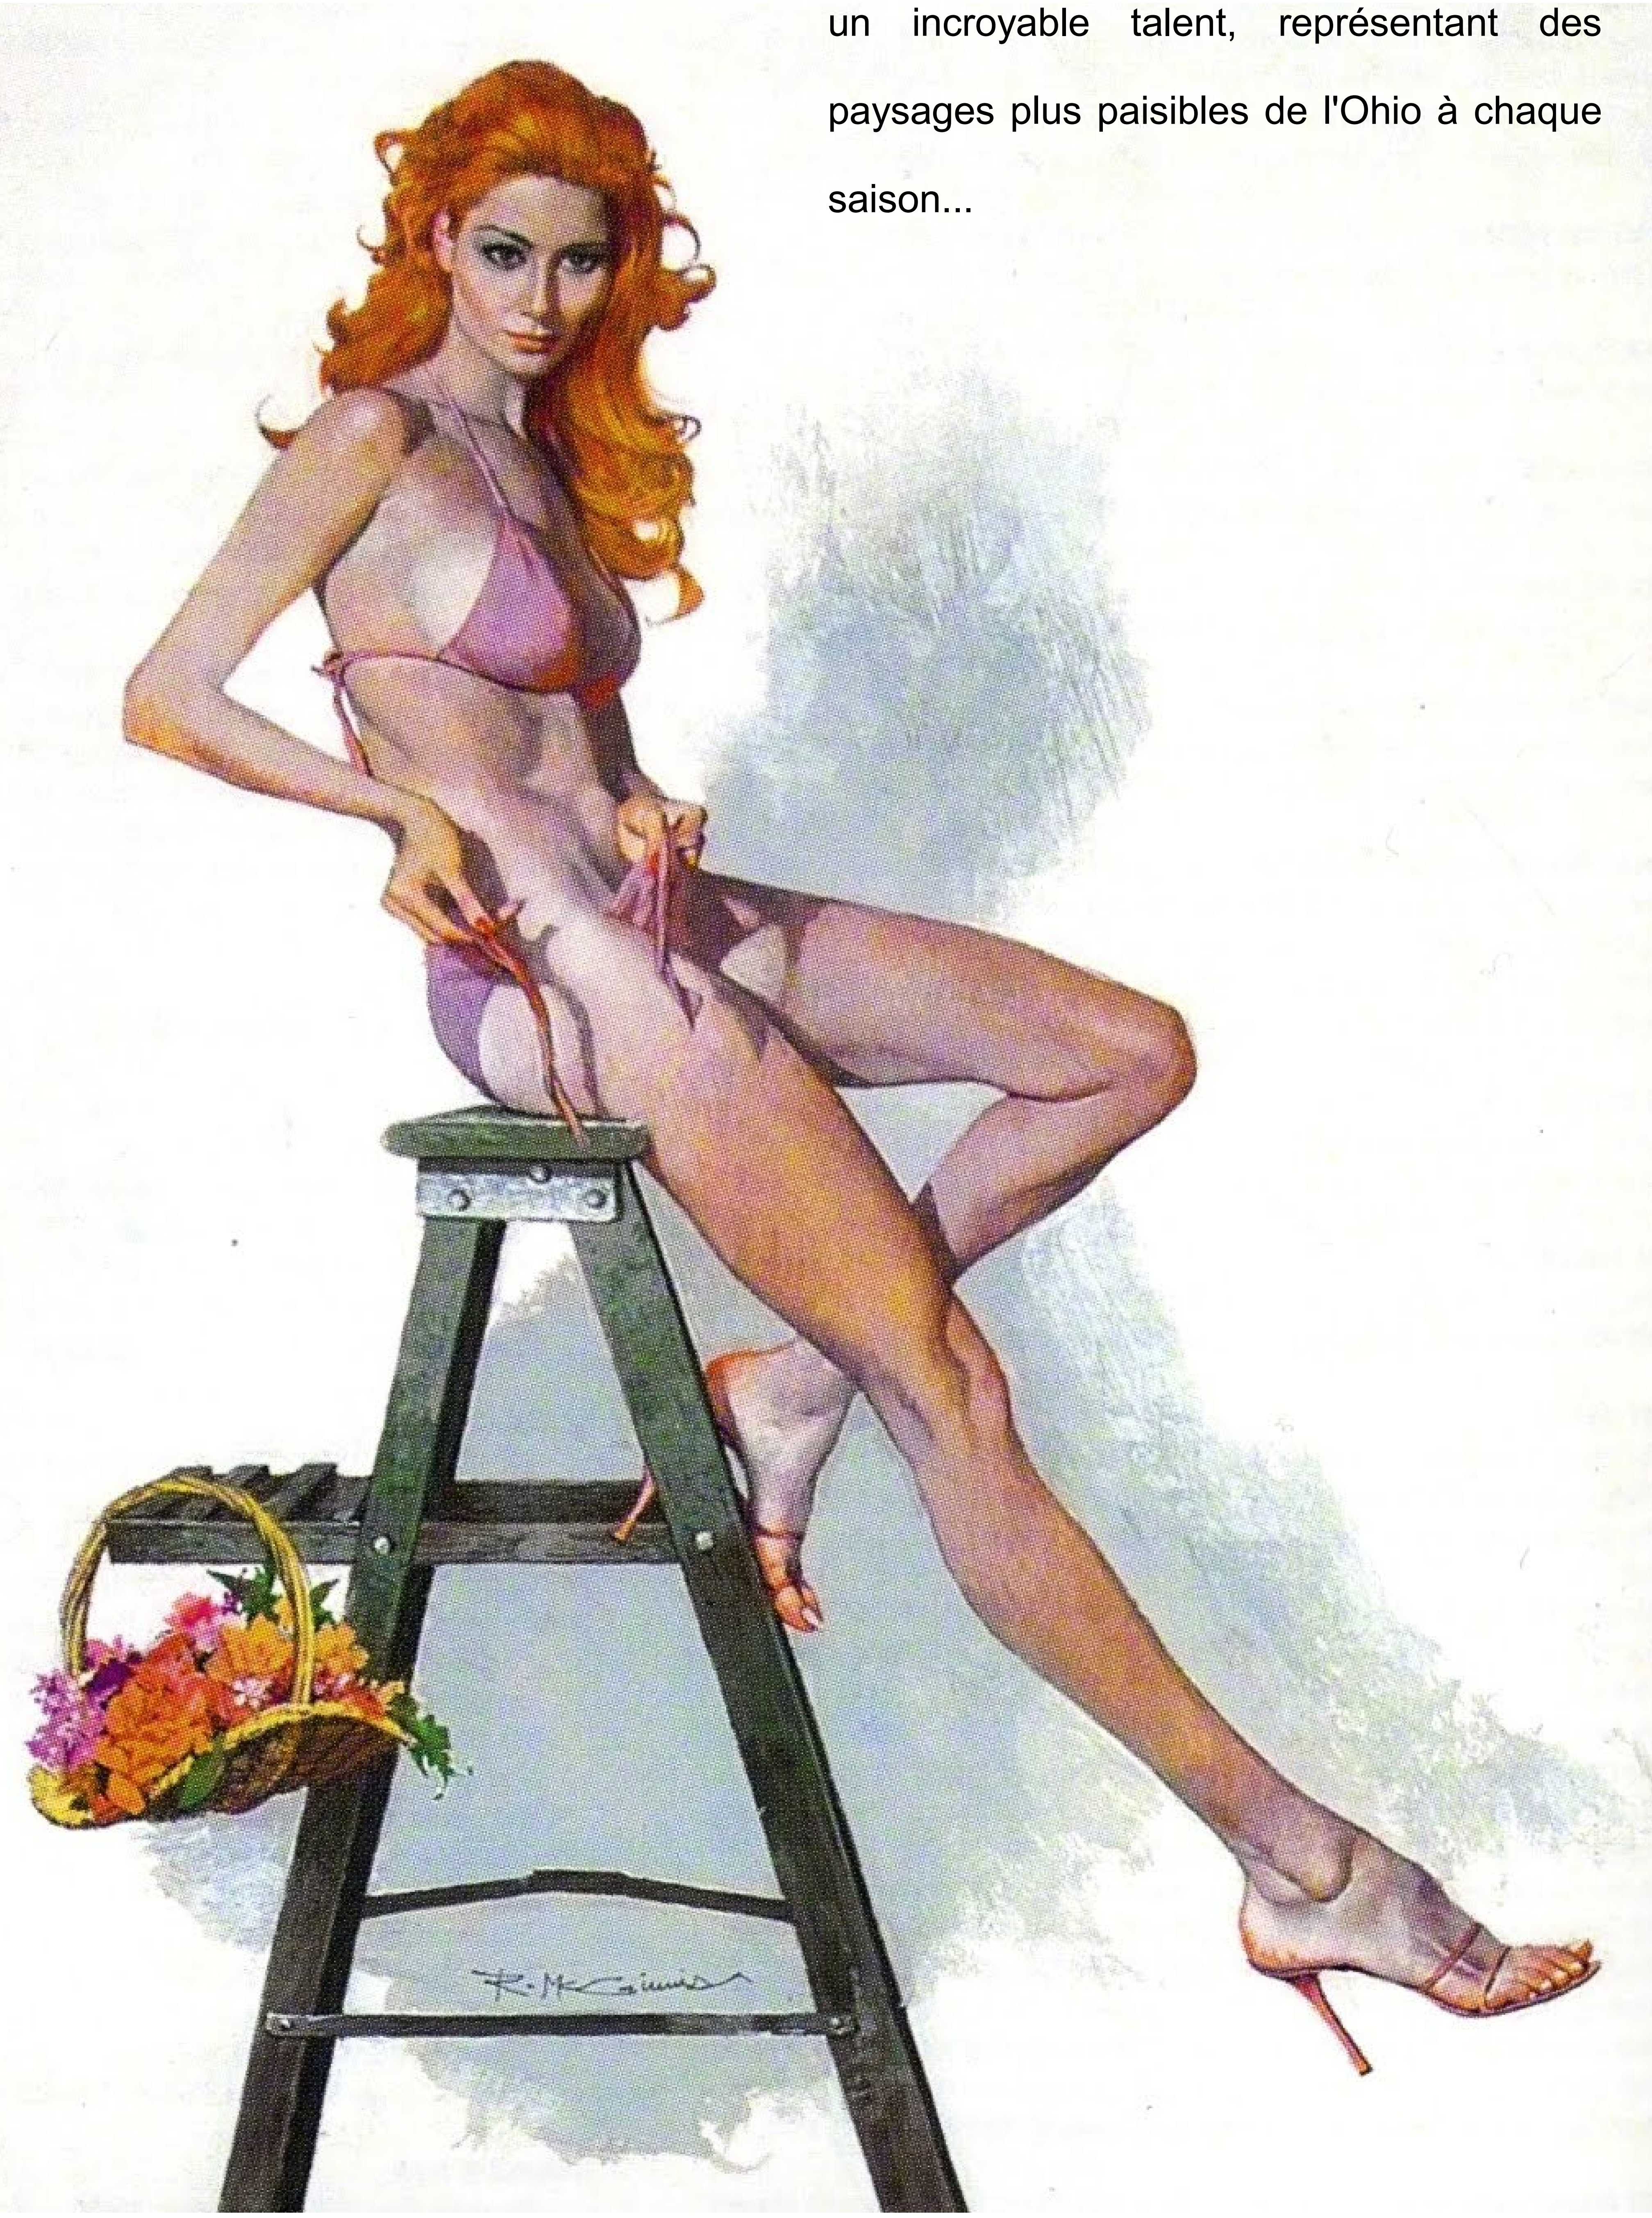

R. McGinnis

Il illustrera plus tard des couvertures de magazines, TIME ou The Saturday Evening Post, ou de revues féminines comme Ladies' Home Journal, Women's Home Companion ou Good Housekeeping.

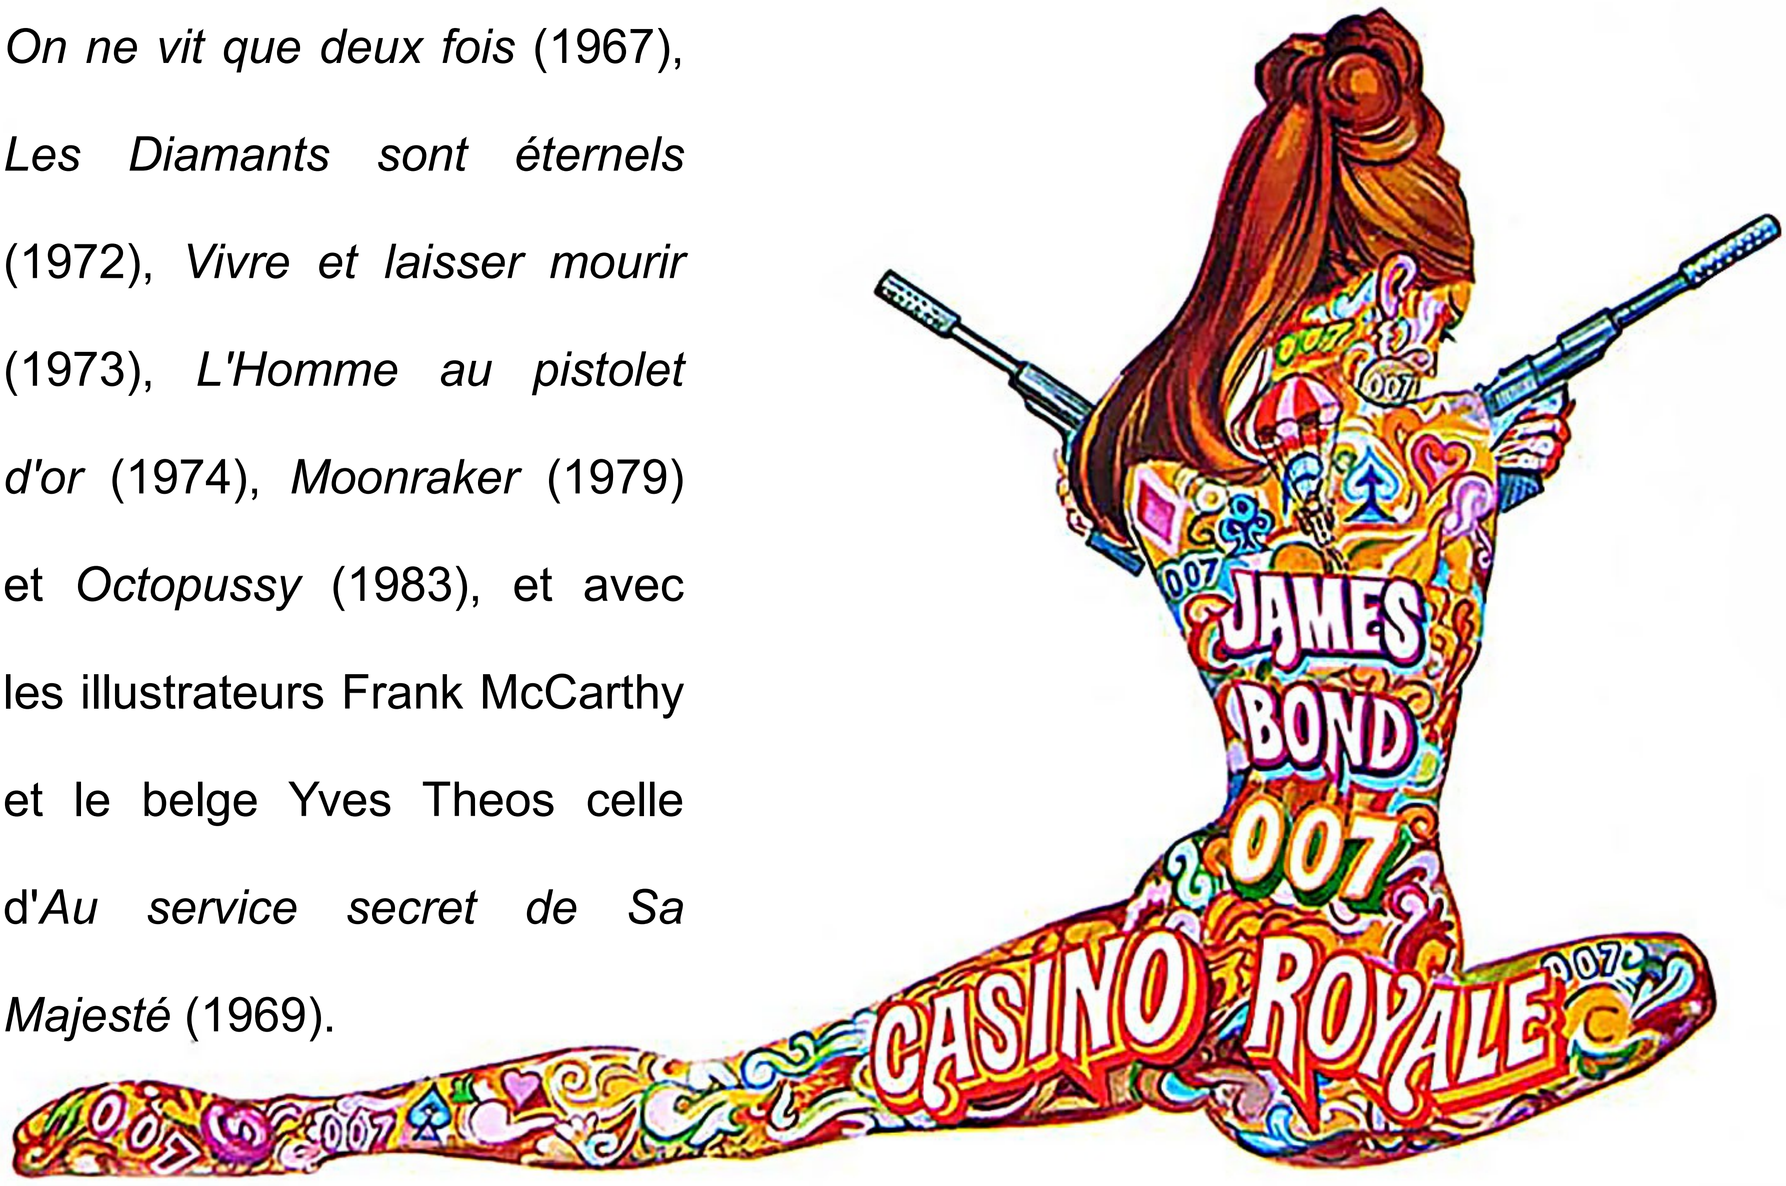

Depuis quelques années, il ne peint presque plus que tableaux figuratifs, toujours avec un incroyable talent, représentant des paysages plus paisibles de l'Ohio à chaque saison...

Sa célébrité, il la doit surtout aux affiches de films qu'il a signé, une quarantaine, de Breakfast At Tiffany's (1961) à Arabesque (1966), de Comment voler un milion de dollars (1966) à La Vie privée de Sherlock Holmes (1970), ou de la parodie jamesbondienne Casino Royale (1967) aux vrais films de la saga James Bond. Le générique du western Sur la piste de la grande caravane (The Hallelujah Trail, 1965) de John Sturges, demeure sa seule réalisation artistique au sein d'un film...

McGinnis a réalisé les affiches d'Opération Tonnerre (1965), On ne vit que deux fois (1967), Les Diamants sont éternels (1972), Vivre et laisser mourir (1973), L'Homme au pistolet d'or (1974), Moonraker (1979) et Octopussy (1983), et avec les illustrateurs Frank McCarthy et le belge Yves Theos celle d'Au service secret de Sa Majesté (1969).
